

Candy Bombers: The Wall of Sweet Relief During the Berlin Airlift

The Berlin Airlift was a humanitarian mission that took place from June 26, 1948 to September 30, 1949. During the airlift, Western Allied nations flew over 2.3 million tons of food, fuel, and other supplies into West Berlin. The airlift was a response to the Soviet Union's blockade of West Berlin, which began on June 24, 1948.

The Candy Bombers were a group of American pilots who participated in the Berlin Airlift. The pilots flew C-47 Skytrain aircraft, which were nicknamed "Raisin Bombers" because they often carried raisins as part of their cargo.

In addition to food and supplies, the Candy Bombers also dropped candy to children in West Berlin. The candy was a symbol of hope and sweetness during the difficult time of the airlift. The children of West Berlin would often wait for the Candy Bombers to fly overhead, and would wave and cheer as the candy rained down from the sky.

The Candy Bombers dropped over 23 tons of candy during the Berlin Airlift. The candy was a mix of chocolates, gum, and hard candies. The children of West Berlin loved the candy, and it helped to boost their morale during the long and difficult blockade.

The Candy Bombers were a group of brave and selfless pilots who helped to make a difference in the lives of the children of West Berlin. Their actions are a reminder of the power of hope and sweetness, even in the darkest of times.

The Wall of Sweet Relief

The Candy Bombers' wall of sweet relief was a line of C-47 Skytrain aircraft that flew over West Berlin and dropped candy to children.
